BIDS TOO HIGH

Washington Street Sewer Held Over One Week—Other Council Business.

The city council held a brief meeting Monday evening to receive and open bids for the construction of the Washington street sewer 560 feet in length. Two bids were opened but both were considered too high and the council reserved its action until the next regular meeting, when other bids may be filed.

Attention was called to the fact that at the west end of the Laporte street paving the street is not laid out square and the street commissioner was directed to consult with the city engineer with a view to finding a remedy for the defect.

The cement walk in front of the Reeve property on Laporte street was found to be too low by four inches and therefore out of line with the other walks on that street. The contractor, Mr. Bowers, was ordered to raise it to the established grade.

A peculiar state of affairs was disclosed in reference to the property line between the Reeve and Rentschler lots on Michigan street, where there is a strip one foot wide of which the ownership is disclaimed by both parties. The question was, who shall build the walk on that strip? The council appointed Parker and Astley as a special committee to find an owner and fix the liability for the walk.

The council was informed that the Pennsylvania company is about to raise the grade of its tracks in Plymouth and that this improvement involves the raising of the Vandalla and Lake Erie tracks at the South street crossing. Inquiry was made as to whether the consent of the council is necessary. The city attorney thought not and the council agreed, provided the company would construct the necessary approaches and crossings.

Old Dan Tucker in Trouble.

Though his wife was dying and he had just been served with notice of a damage suit, Dan Sherman, leading man in the "Old Dan Tucker" company, which appeared in Laporte Monday night, played the role of the jovial farmer with such realistic effect that the audience did not suspect the sorrow and strain under which the actor was laboring.

Mrs. Sherman, whose stage name is Mabelle De Forest, sobrette in the company, was taken sick Friday night at Nappanee, where she now lies critically ill. Sunday Sherman's dog chased a ball in a baseball field, and as Andrew Holm, a player, grabbed for the ball the animal caught him in the hip. Though the injuries were trifling, Holm brought suit for damages, and tied up the company so that the manager was compelled to accede to Holm's demands in order to secure the release of the troupe's baggage.

David Harum in Chicago.

An engagement of more than ordinary interest in Chicago is that of William H. Crane, who takes possession of Power's Theatre in that city on Oct. 21st for a considerable time to present under Charles Frohman's direction the dramatization of "David Harum."

The engagement is of special interest to people of Plymouth, for Judge Capron was acquainted with the original of David Harum and has related many incidents of his life not given in Westcott's book.

The comedian presented the comedy in New York nearly all of last season and his success with it verges on the phenomenal. It is held that Harum is the most entertaining and best drawn character in modern American fiction. His prototype is known in nearly every community and as Westcott pictured him he was delightfully humorous.

Of all the actors on the stage, Mr. Crane is best fitted to impersonate the shrewd old chap who believed in the maxim, as he himself expressed it, "Do unto the other feller as you would have him do unto you, only do him fust." Mr. Crane gives a capital portrait of the old fellow and not only takes possession of his outward semblance but of his heart as well.

He shows three sides of the old chap's character—pictures him at his hobby, trading horses; later as a man of leisure in his bank and finally brings into view the best side of his nature in his home. In the work of transferring the story to the stage, very few liberties were taken with it and in the play are found all the familiar characters and all of the quaint expression and humorous philosophy of the book.

Mr. Frohman has surrounded Mr. Crane with a capital company and at the close of the Chicago engagement, will take the play to Boston, where it will finish out the season. Throughout the Chicago engagement at Power's Theatre it has been decided to give matinees on Wednesdays as well as on Saturdays.
